TV Series Not The Answer?

USATF IS OPTIMISTIC that the impending indoor TV series is going to do wonders for the sport. Writing from Phoenix, Arizona, subscriber John Prather has a counterpoint of view:

"Please pardon me if I don't get particularly excited about USATF's new television plan.

"USATF—and the track & field community in general—has long screamed that we need to broaden the sport's appeal, to attract new fans. Current fans will probably watch the new televised meets, but I know of many who won't lose a wink of sleep if they miss one, either.

"Many of us believe that indoor track hasn't had much spectator appeal since Eamonn Coghlan's days as Chairman of the Boards. And that's from track diehards!

"As for the new fans we're trying to woo: If they wouldn't watch track before, why should they watch it now?

"Consider the case of the vegetarian whose friends take him to a buffet restaurant. "You'll really enjoy it," they tell him, "because they've added several new meat dishes." Quite simply, adding more stuff somebody doesn't like isn't suddenly going to get them to like it. Until USATF and the networks get a clue about how to present a track meet, I really don't see any change in viewership.

"Much like Amtrak could stand to learn from the European train system, USATF and the networks could definitely go to school in the European presentation of 'athletics'. The commentators are well-informed.

"I will never forget one American announcer, an individual paid to cover distance running, miscalling the Zürich mile and then blaming his spotter. If John Madden were to confuse Joe Montana with John Elway, I don't think he could pass it off to a misprint in the game program.

"Finally, to continue with the football analogy, imagine showing only six or seven plays of the Super Bowl, but showing them ad nauseam. That's the current TV presentation of track & field—the same event presented four times (backward, forward, reverse angle, and slow motion) followed by interviews with the same athletes who were interviewed last week. There's no drama in that.

"Now, instead, visualize a two-hour broadcast that features an event, followed by another event, followed by another event, and so forth. It's much like the outlandish concept of showing every play of a football game in sequence.

"When my mom realized that I didn't like peas, she didn't give me a choice of different pea recipes. She simply changed the menu. The same concept must apply here—don't do it more, do it right. Or else quit complaining that nobody wants to watch track on TV, because I for one cannot blame them at all."

Indoor TV Schedule

The USATF TV series will be broadcast on five consecutive Saturday afternoons on NBC. As they say, check your local listings to be sure of the time.

February 4—Chemical Bank Millrose Games (New York City).

February 11—Reno Air Games (Reno, Nevada).

February 18—Key Corp Track & Field Classic (Cleveland, Ohio).

February 25—Mobil Invitational (Fairfax, Virginia)

March 4—USATF Indoor Championships (Atlanta, Georgia).

The Mobil and USATF meets will be televised live; the other three are delayed from Friday.

Aouita To Return

At the relatively advanced age of 35, former WR holder Saïd Aouita has decided to rejoin the distance-running wars. He started modestly, with an 8:10 for 3000m in Hamilton.

"I love competition, and when I see athletes my age who are still around, I ask myself, 'Why not me?'" Aouita told France's L'Équipe. "A few years ago, people thought an athlete's career was over at 30. That's not true any more. Look at people like Christie and Ottey, who became world champions at 33."

Aouita spent the last couple of years as Morocco's national team director, but was fired last fall. He says he had 5000m training times in the low 13:20s last year, despite not working out much.

"I've started the same type of training I did in the '80s," said the 1985 Athlete Of The Year. "Since then track & field hasn't progressed much. I was 15 years ahead of my time, and today I'm equal with the others.

"I can't say I will become world champion again in Göteborg, but everything is possible."

Drug Policy Questioned

IOC medical chief Alexandre de Merode can hardly be accused of being soft on drug abuse, but he is nonetheless concerned about the viability of the IAAF's new policy of announcing positive drug tests before the "B" sample is confirmed (T&FN, February).

De Merode said, "The IAAF is free to do what it wants, but we have a different view and we will discuss the question together. The advice of our judicial commission was that it touched on the question of human rights. It's a basic principle and I shall say that to the IAAF."

An Indoor Golden 4?

Given the remarkable success of the outdoor linkage of the Berlin, Brussels, Oslo and Zürich meets as the "Golden 4," European organizers are now at work on creating a similar setup for this undercover season. IAAF head Primo Nebiolo has apparently given his blessing to the concept.

Mentioned as the four sites which would comprise this new venture are Birmingham, England; Liévin, France; Stockholm, Sweden, and Stuttgart, Germany.

Ricoh is being mentioned as a probable title sponsor for the affair, although the specific prize setup has not yet been publicized. In the outdoor version, athletes in specific events compete for a grand prize of 20 gold bars weighing 1kg each.

Mason To Skip IC4A

In a decision that coach John Cook calls "difficult," and one "we're not happy about," George Mason will skip the IC4A Indoor in March, instead aiming at the following weekend's NCAA Championships.

Smith that his program is not slighting what he calls "the East Coast championship" after many years of being a contender. But he calls this year's back-to-back scheduling "horrendous" and notes that after the NCAAs his Patriots will want to be gearing up for April's important Penn Relays.

"I was afraid we'd just run the kids to death," says Cook. "You can't just go from championship to championship. You can only go to the well so many times."

The decision, he says, is widely supported by the athletes and coaching staff.

Modahl Loses Hearing

A 5-member British federation disciplinary commission has ruled that the IAAF's doping suspension of 800 runner Diane Modahl (T&FN, November) should be upheld. The group said it was "satisfied unanimously beyond reasonable doubt that a doping offense had been committed."

For Modahl, the next step is another hearing, before a federation arbitration panel. Should that body decide her case has merit, they will forward it to the IAAF Medical Committee, which could then make a recommendation to the IAAF Council.

Making good on a threat it issued when the British decided to keep their women's team in the World Cup, the IAAF subsequently voided Britain's result at the World Cup. The British team had qualified using points earned by Modahl.

"Our September warning was clear," said IAAF spokesman Christopher Winner, "and we have no choice but to abide by those warnings. Some say we should be more forgiving, but casual forgiveness does not honor the sport."

100 Sub-4:00s Club

Irish miler Marcus O'Sullivan wants to be part of a super-exclusive club of which only John Walker and Steve Scott are currently members: those who have run a century's worth of sub-4:00 miles.

"They're an elite fraternity," says O'Sullivan. "I would like to join them. It's something you'd like to be able to tell your kids and your grandchildren that you did. They can relate to that; not to running a 3:32 or 3:34 for 1500m."

"At my age, you have to have some goals that are attainable—tough enough but reachable."

O'Sullivan, 33, says his sub-4:00 count is currently in the 80s, and it should take him another two or three years to reach 100.

"I'm enjoying the last couple of years of my career," says the Villanova alum. "I compare it to a kid having a big jar of candy. At the beginning you're stuffing your face with the candy. Then, when you have only about a half-dozen pieces left, you start to savor them. You treat every race like it's special."

Ondieki To Skip Worlds

Echoing Britain's Liz McColgan (T&FN, January), former marathon WR holder Lisa Ondieki has come out with a broadside against the Chinese women runners, saying she won't compete against them at this year's World Championships because they use drugs.

"It's a joke that a woman can run 29:30 for 10,000m," said the 34-year-old Aussie after running 31:47.11 in December. "That's a Junior men's time, not a women's time."

"I would not waste my time or my energy going to a world championship to run against supposed women who can run 29:30. I think it's a joke."

Blinn Program To Go

Blinn JC's awesome run of national championships will apparently come to a stop in '96, based on a vote by the Texas school's board of trustees to discontinue its track program.

Citing gender-equity requirements and high travel costs, the school's new president has decided to add women's softball and volleyball at the expense of a program that had won 18 national titles (8 indoor, 8 outdoor and 2 in cross country) in the last decade.

"I just think track & field was not wanted by the new administration," claims first-year coach Tom Lester. "They said the reason was the sport did not generate money or public interest. It's not right to take something this successful and just drop it."

Lester, who took over as the interim head coach when Steve Silvey left for an assistant position at Arkansas last fall, says he was unaware that a vote was even being taken, and was notified just three hours prior to the meeting.

With Odessa having dropped its men's team last year, the track-rich state of Texas has only two men's programs at the JC level—San Jacinto and South Plains.

'97 Worlds To Move?

Mexico City may lose the '97 World Championships, says England's Duncan Mackay, writing in The Guardian.

Cited as a major problem for the Mexican capital is none of the oft-listed criticisms that have been levelled at the high altitude sight. It's not because of potential thin-air distress for long-distance runners, or the dangers of the WR logs being ravaged in sprint events or the foul, smog-ridden atmosphere. It's not even the nearby rumbling volcano.

The problem is a simple one: the stadium, constructed for the '68 Olympics, is apparently in a stage of severe disrepair. "There are serious problems," an IAAF spokesman admitted to Mackay.

IAAF president Primo Nebiolo will soon lead a high-level deputation to Mexico to examine the situation.

The Mexicans have reportedly suggested keeping the event in their nation, moving it some 300M north to Guadalajara, but apparently there may not be enough time to get that stadium ready either.

It has been suggested that Seville, Spain, which is so far the only official bidder for the '99 Worlds, could step in a couple of years early, but Mackay says that their new stadium isn't scheduled to be completed until '98.

There are undoubtedly some European cities that could take over on relatively short notice, but the IAAF—which places such stock in its pan-global image—isn't particularly keen on having three Worlds in a row on the Continent.

Postman Rings Twice

Norwegian sprinter Aham Okeke may have dodged a drug-testing bullet in the middle of 1994, but in December got struck right between the eyes.

Okeke tested positive for the stimulant pseudoephedrine at the Stockholm meet last July. That should have carried a 90-day sentence, but the Norwegian federation—much to the displeasure of the IAAF—ruled that he hadn't tried to enhance his performance.

But as the year closed a random-testing team visited the 25-year-old Okeke at Abilene Christian and collected a sample that failed the testosterone-ratio test.

"There is no doubt we're dealing with a positive dope test," said the president of the Norwegian federation, Lars Kaupang (the former Oregon miler). "He is finished as a top athlete in Norway."

Okeke, of course, maintains his innocence in the matter. In the meantime, his scholarship to Abilene Christian has been revoked.

USTCA Dual Poll

The first USTCA/T&FN Coaches Dual Meet Poll of the season is, for the most part, a pre-season compilation, as most squads have not yet competed in scoring duals.

This season, the requirement is that a school cannot be ranked unless it has at least one scoring dual on its indoor schedule. Some of the schools listed below may not fit that criterion, but as we become aware of them they will be removed.

Men	Women
