Not A National Hero?

You'd think that as a World champ Wilson Kipketer would be the apple of the Danish tart, but he's apparently not.

As it now stands, the world's best 800 runner is ineligible to represent his new country in the Olympics because he doesn't yet have full citizenship, and won't until '97, unless parliament pushes it through.

A Danish newspaper polled its readers and 51% said they thought the Kenyan expatriate shouldn't receive special treatment (and only 38% thought he should).

Kipketer, twice under 1:43 this year, says he hasn't been thinking World Record. "That will perhaps be for the years to come," he says.

Who's The Top Sprinter?

Feeling confident after his Cologne win, Donovan Bailey said, "I don't think I have to do any more to prove that I'm No. 1 in the world. I won the most important race of the year in Sweden, and everybody was there and not hurt."

At that point, however, despite his 5th in the Worlds Linford Christie certainly still had some claim to the top spot, holding a 3-2 edge in head-to-head battles.

Christie had won in Madrid, Oslo and Zürich (saying, "I'm not the fastest man in the world; I was the fastest one today"), Bailey in Lausanne and at the Worlds. Bailey may not consider Oslo a loss, since he didn't race in the final, but since he failed to advance from the heats, our selectors will count it.

Subsequently, Christie increased his edge to 4-2 at Brussels and 5-2 in London before Bailey made it 5-3 in Berlin.

Too bad there's no 100 scheduled in the GP Final this year (although there's always the possibility of its being added as a non-GP event). Should they not meet again, the call will be a tough one indeed.

Restricted Earnings Respite

At least for the time being, the position of "restricted earnings" coach on the staffs of most NCAA college track programs has been revamped by the organization's administrative committee.

The move came after a federal judge said that she would rule against the NCAA in a lawsuit filed by several restricted-earnings basketball coaches.

"The restrictions on earnings have been lifted," says Kathryn Reith, director of public information for NCAA Legislative Services. "But the other restrictions—on recruiting, etc—remain in place. There will be several pieces of legislation concerning this at the January convention."

Gone for now is the $12,000 earnings limit that many of track's assistant coaches have had to survive on.

"What has happened has varied dramatically by school," says Oregon's Tom Heinonen. Some coaches have gotten substantial salary increases, while others remain at the "restricted" level. Oregon, for instance, has raised the salaries in question to $20,000 for the 9-month school year.

While none of the pending legislation will be finalized until the NCAA Convention, Heinonen indicated that not all track coaches believe the prospective rule changes will be an improvement.

Names In The News

Russian Larisa Peleshenko has been banned for four years following a positive steroid test in training. The test came before the World Indoor, but she was allowed compete (and win) the shot there, prior to the "B" test.

Indoor runnerup Katrin Neimke of Germany has been awarded the gold retroactively, with Connie Price-Smith moving up to silver...

World javelin champ Natalya Shikolenko says that last year she almost decided to move from Belarus to Russia because she was offered "a lot more money" from the Russian federation. "But now," she says, "I'm not so sure..."

After he handed Jan Zelezny a rare defeat at Zürich, Raymond Hecht was asked if he had found the key to beating the WR holder. "Yes, I think so," he said. "Throw longer..."

If you thought that Sheila Hudson-Strudwick was the longest-jumping American-born tripler, think again, because you're probably wrong on two counts.

First, it turns out that Hud-Strud was born in Germany, so the top person on the U.S. list becomes Wendy Brown. But wait, it also turns out that Britain's Ashia Hansen, a 48-1 $\frac{1}{4}$  performer, was born in Evansville, Indiana...

Seeking to regain the form that made her the '93 AOY, Wang Junxia says she is training twice a day, and learned a lot by watching the Worlds on TV. "I watched closely how [my rivals] ran and studied their skills and tactics," she says...

The current Atlanta schedule is very kind to women who might want to try a 1500/5000 double. The first name that springs to mind in that category is Sonia O'Sullivan, who says, "I will definitely run the 5000m and I will decide later about possible additions to the program."

The 5000 starts with heats on the first day of the meet, Friday. The final is on Sunday. The 1500 heats don't start until Wednesday, with semis on Thursday and the final not until Saturday...

Haile Gebrselassie apparently gave his potential 5K rivals a good mental going-over in Göteborg. Athletics Weekly reports that the 10K winner showed up at the practice track and went through his full pre-race routine. After an "impressive session," he went to the check-in desk and told them he had had a last-minute change of heart and wouldn't run.

Status Quo

After pulling up injured in Zürich, Mike Powell decided to call it a season and returned home to LA...

Kenya has levied 2-month suspensions (not that that means much at this point) against it's 4x4 squad that failed to show for the WC final: Charles Gitonga, Kennedy Ochieng, Abednego Matilu and Eric Keter...

Arkansas State has lost one of its prime recruits, Marsha Ottey. The cousin of world champ Merlene Ottey, 19-year-old Marsha was found shot to death in her suburban Toronto home in August.

An Atlanta Mantra

Linford Christie is singing variations on the same old song nearly everywhere he runs these days: "I'm not going to Atlanta."

The defending Olympic champion first dropped his no-Olympics bomb in early June, shortly after his mother's death. Prime among the reasons he cited for his decision was "harsh treatment" by the British media, with whom he has long had an adversarial relationship.

As he later revealed, "You know, I went through hell that night. We had journalists ring and ask my dad on the phone if they could take a picture of my mother's body."

Prior to leaving for Göteborg the British sprint star made what Athletics Weekly called "an emotional revelation" on TV, saying this would be his last season.

Asked at a pre-Zürich press conference if his disappointing 5th-place finish at the Worlds might alter his thinking, he said forcefully, "Nothing has happened to change my mind."

After his big win in the Swiss city, however, Christie opened the door a little, saying, "I am not retiring; I'm not giving up. My starts are getting better and better."

But he also said, "I will be running for me and see what I can do. I will run everything apart from the Olympic Games. I will be in Atlanta, but only as a spectator."

Yet after his Rieti win, Christie opened the door yet another crack, saying, "I probably [italics ours] will not be competing in Atlanta. I have nothing to show at 35, except that athletics can be fun."
